

The Night Owl Vol 1
Mermaids, Flamingos, and Honey Bears

The Mermaid and The Night Owl

Once there was a mermaid who swam in waters so blue.

This mermaid fell in love with a night owl who soared over her waters at night. Each month on the new moon, when the darkness of night and the ocean seem to meet, the mermaid and the night owl danced at the water's surface and shared a love unknown

The Hurricane Flamingo

On the sunny shores of south florida all the locals know of the legendary Hurricane Flamingo, who would fly directly into the eye of any hurricane threatening her young. Every season, some local would see her squawking at the hurricane without an ounce of fear and would take off at it like she would an attacker.

The Sober Hare and the Drunken Tortoise

After the famous race, very few know what happened to that dismayed Hare, but he swore to never get wasted the night before a race again. And that night, in the local forest tavern, he challenged the tortoise, who had been celebrating quite hard, to another foot race in the parking lot. And although it wasn't the greatest of victories, the Hare got a bit of his pride back. Enjoy these low ABV cocktails to be more like the Hare, not everyone can be the drunken tortoise.

Fitzgerald Rock

In the Galapagos Islands there is a mystery that is not widely known, but is quite the mystery nonetheless. On the north side of a small island there is a rock that appears to have the name fitzgerald etched so deeply into it that it has lasted over 600 years. Now how someone with that name and the time and ability to etch that deeply into solid rock made it all the way to that side of the world is an unsolved mystery to this day.
